

I am sending a letter to comment on the Do-Not-Call Implementation Act. This letter is in regards to encouraging you to make sure this Act is enabled as law. For many years telemarketers have bothered families and individuals with calls trying to sell a product of some sort. These telemarketers push their product or service on these people, and many times the consumer tries to be polite and decline the offer. Telemarketers are trained to be persistent by their employers because they know the longer they keep a potential customer on the line the better chance they have to sell what they are pedaling. At some point the victim may purchase, if for no other reason than to end the unwanted phone call. The bully tactic works very well for these "salespeople". I have even had telemarketers become rude if no product is bought. The consumer has a right to not be harrassed in his/her own home.
